AGREEING WITH MR. HOOVER

If Herbert Hoover, enjoying the opportunity of talking with Adolf Hitler man to man, told the reichsfuehrer he doubted that Nazi notions would last long inside Germany and certainly wouldn't catch on in the United States, he said something worth hearing.

It wasn't news to Herr Hitler, though, who knows, and reveals in frequently expressed resentment of criticism and suppression of opponents, that he has a bear by the tail in a blemish patch.

Herr Hitler knows he's in a political predicament, that every dictator is in one, and that no democratic government able to hit on half its cylinders is in the slightest danger of being put out of business by the totalitarians, who wouldn't be the way they are if they weren't desperate enough to try anything.

"UNFAIR"

Gov. Davey would be a lot better off with the voters whose admiration he's trying to win if he would quit yelling "unfair." Never having made any secret of his own fondness for political roughhouse, he's in a poor position to condemn the opposition for musing his hair.

A few years ago there was an epidemic of "unfairness" in the boxing industry. It was fashionable for fighters, particularly when they were getting the worst of it, to drop to the canvas and yell "unfair," or words to that effect, meanwhile rolling their eyes in agony to get the sympathy of the crowd and referee.

This worked for a while. In fact, one heavyweight won a world's championship on a claim of foul. But it wasn't long till spectators began to smell a mouse.
They began to turn thumbs down on boxers who were made of such frail stuff they were always being pushed around by other boxers. To come right to the point, spectators began to believe it was a phony act.

Politics, when you come right down to it, is a good deal like boxing. A fighter who likes to dish it out, but can't take it—who screams "unfair" when things get tough—can't expect much sympathy. The spectators turn sour on him.

MONITOR VS. MERRIMAC

The Merrimac had raised hob with Yankee wooden ships in Hampton Roads. Their cannon balls bounced off its sloping iron sides and their fragile hulls crumpled like egg crates at the impact of its big guns and iron ram.

So the Yankees sent down the Monitor from Brooklyn navy yard to take care of the matter. The "cheesebox on a raft" steamed down to Hampton roads. On the 9th of March, 1861, the famous engagement took place.

The Merrimac and Monitor huffed and puffed and huffed and puffed, but neither could gain an advantage. While hundreds watched from shore, the two ironclads finally drew apart and went their separate ways.

It was the beginning of the era of armor plate and big guns for the navies of the world. It was the beginning of the era of battleships so impregnable that neither side in an engagement could expect to beat the other side decisively enough to settle anything. It was the beginning of ingenuity of design, of costliness in construction, of BIG NAVIES.

As the 76th anniversary of that epochal engagement passes, taxpayers of the world stand with bowed heads and flattened pocketbooks, duly impressed with the debt they owe the Merrimac and Monitor. They'll always owe it, they guess.

CONFIDENCE IN CONGRESS

The plan to reorganize the executive branch of the government was forgotten after congress, spurred by sharp opposition, refused last year to sanction the judicial reorganization plan, which was a companion measure.

The fight, it was assumed, had been decided by defeat of the court bill. There was to be no individual domination of any branch of the government, including the executive branch.

Leaders of the court fight, however, are issuing warnings that the executive reorganization plan may be pushed through while those opposed to it are relaxing in false security.

Attempts to rally opposition, they say, are failing.

ALL FAITHS JOIN IN RITES AT AZTEC RUINS

AZTEC, N. M., March 10.—One of the largest and certainly the most unique religious services to be held in the United States was being planned here by leaders of all religious denominations in the San Juan Basin for Easter Sunday.

The usual religious service will be held for the third time at the Aztec Ruins, national monument where upwards of 1,500 persons will gather before sunrise Easter morning for worship among the historic ruins of a famous and religious people.

13th Century Precedent
In the 13th century many religious services were held in the Great Kiva of the Aztec Ruins for in those ancient days the Pueblos held all services in the Kivas, evidence that the tribes of the southwest in the 13th century received orders from this sacred chamber. Instilled with the historic spirit of these ancient peoples, the services will be conducted by all denominations including Protestants, Catholics, Hebrews and Latter Day Saints.

Boy Scouts, American Legion, and Legion Auxiliary will cooperate in the services which will begin with a parade through the Ruins and then at sunrise the worshippers will gather around the great Kiva.

Originally San Warriors
The people who occupied the Aztec Ruins were sun worshippers, apparently because of indifference, though the objection to the executive reorganization bill is the same as objection to the court reorganization bill—presidential domination of a branch of the government.

Whatever shortcomings there may be in popular interest in executive reorganization is not the result of apathy, however. Rather, it is the result of confidence in congress. It is taken for granted that a majority of congressmen, knowing how their constituents reacted to the threat of personal domination in one instance, will not need to be reminded again that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

The chief importance of the judicial reorganization debate was that it proved congress still was responsive to electors on a vital issue which a willful executive was determined to settle without recourse to popular opinion. It proved that representative democracy could still function after having been suspended.

The people are confident their representatives and senators will not betray them by approving any plan of executive reorganization which would open the way to individual domination of the federal government.

A Little Lesson in Speed

HEALTH

By Dr. Royal S. Copeland, New York City.

BUNIONS
IN CERTAIN sections of the world where no foot covering of any sort is used, few, if any, deformities of the feet are experienced. But our present mode of living demands some protection for the feet. We cannot get along with sandals or go barefooted, and so must use shoes.

Unfortunately, many shoes are designed for style rather than for comfort. Some of them do not conform to the shape of the foot. Continued pressure and constriction of the toes leads to inflammation and deformity of the joints of the foot.

Like other joints of the body, the foot joints are surrounded by small sacs. These sacs contain a fluid known as synovial fluid. This is a lubricating substance, promoting free movement of the joint. The sac which surrounds the joint and contains the fluid is known as a "bursa."

If a toe or joint is subjected to pressure and irritation, the bursa will become inflamed, producing a condition called "bursitis." In addition to inflammation of the sac, there may be a marked inflammation of the skin overlying the part. Then there exists what is known as a "bunion."

Has Other Causes
"Hallux valgus," the medical name for bunion, may have other causes than the wearing of improperly-fitted shoes. For example, it may be caused by some constitutional disorder, such as arthritis, gout, diabetes or rheumatism.

Escaped Poison Plot

Nikolai Yezhov

An unsuccessful attempt to poison Nikolai Yezhov, above, present chief of the Soviet secret police, was discovered at the Moscow treason trial where 21 are on trial. Disclosure of the attempt at Yezhov's life followed testimony of the "poison murder" of Maxim Gorky, famed Russian writer. Genrikh Yagoda, former secret police chief and one of those on trial, admitted the attempt on Yezhov's life.

Modern Swains Are Warned Against Proposing In Treacherous Moonlight

(By International News Service)

FRANKLIN, Ind.—Marriage proposals should be made at high noon, instead of in the "treacherous" moonlight, according to Dr. W. G. Mather, Jr., head of the sociology department of Franklin College.

"Using one's head is difficult at any time, especially so in the matter of choosing a life partner," Dr. Mather said.

"Love is by nature an emotional matter, and under strong emotional forces, it is hard to think clearly. The stronger you are attracted to another, go that much slower in forming life-long attachments, for the very force of desire clouds your reasoning ability."

Dr. Mather recommended that young people have "lots of dates." "Don't become engaged while freshmen or sophomores in college," he warned. "The mortality of such engagements is high in college."

'Be Sure It's Love'

"Be sure it's love," Dr. Mather advised. "Love is not what it is usually thought of and sung about; love is not an overwhelming desire to be with the other person alone; love is an overwhelming desire for the welfare of the other person, whether you are to be a part of that welfare or not. It is regarding, in that you want best for him or her, not for yourself. Love cannot be jealous. Be aware that Mother Nature does not care two cents for having been saying. She wants to have children. She does even care whether you marry or never. She wants children, makes you want children.

"But the mere desire to a physical relations with another not fit basis for marriage. Only a part of marriage; there also the mental and spiritual companionships that no true love do without, and without which marriage can endure."

"And remember, as you others, that others must judge, do not think that courtship consists of your finding a good mate. It consists equally of your being a good mate."

LONDON — A specimen of horns of an antelope, extinct ox, ancestor of all European domestic cattle, was exhibited at a meeting of the Thames Conservancy Board. It was found during dredging operations below Buscot near Farington, Berkshire.

BRING GIRL WRITES OF WAR

Girsberger Strips Glamor From Oriental Conflict

...sitting on one side and the other. We speak to them and they are touched. Tears come to their eyes and the mother begs us to do something for her son. We do what we can, but we can't do much. We pray for the sick man. Two days later we return and find he is dead.

In another corner lay a small child with a high fever. There is no one to care for him and only one mother to cover him and his mother is ill. Three other children. Near them lay a woman quite ill who is unable to eat coarse noodles. Her husband begs us for money with which to buy a little food for the sick woman. Here a mother holds up a four-month-old baby (it looks like a four-day-old child) and says there is no milk for it.

Another mother cries as she looks at her sick child with a sore throat and a high fever. She clings to him and begs for help. A week later we return and find the mother sitting with a well child. An elderly person points to his thin sumptuous clothes and says he is cold. There is a little girl, the only member of her family who escaped the camp.

When we visit another camp for the first time. As we enter no children are in sight. We meet only. Upon inquiry, we learn that there are about 200 men in this camp. They were working in factories when the war broke out and had to flee. Many of their families were killed and others are scattered until they do not know where they are.

In another camp a group of men, women and children gather about and listen with the deepest interest to the gospel that is given. Some of them express their desire to become Christians. This causes our hearts to rejoice. Please pray for these refugees and the gospel work that is being done among them. Many may be saved.

Communications Broken
Since the Japanese have taken Nanking, we have had no word from our stations. We hope to hear from them as soon as the lines of communication are restored between here and Nanking.

Ebel Naylor is at Hongkong, and hopes to come to Shanghai. We do not know when it will be possible to return to Nanking and Lahu but trust it will not be too long.

Miss Naylor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Naylor, at Beloit, is also a missionary. She formerly taught in the Salem schools.

Forms Committee
COLUMBUS, March 10. — Gov. Arthur L. Davey announced appointment today of the final three members of a nine-member committee to study the Ohio delinquent tax situation.

A smart suit is the backbone of every spring wardrobe, and whether it is tailored, bolero or sport suit, the trend is the same. There is continued emphasis on the high bust-line, nipped-in waist and skirts well fitted to show rounded hips. Three stars of the movie world are models here.

Fleet Commander-in-Chief Will Act As Arbiter in War Games In Pacific

(By United Press)
WASHINGTON, March 4.—Admiral Claude Charles Bloch, commander-in-chief of the U. S. Fleet, will be the head arbiter in the annual spring war games in the Pacific.

The son of an emigrant from the former German Bohemia (now Czechoslovakia), Bloch is 59 and reputed to be one of the hardest workers and quickest thinkers in the navy.

Men who have risen in the ranks with Bloch marvel at his ability to reach important decisions with a minimum of effort and time.

"His mind seems to work a fraction faster than any high naval officer I know," Admiral J. O. Richardson, an old shipmate of Bloch's in his early days, remarked.

"And he's one of the most industrious men I know, too," Richardson said. "There is never any wasted time with him."

Despite his rigid adherence to duty, Bloch, in his leisure hours, spends his time much as anyone else might, Richardson commented.

Likes Golf and Bridge
He plays a fair game of bridge and is "quite pleased" if he "breaks a 100" at golf, Richardson said. He has a keen sense of humor, likes to dance and mingle with people. He is an easy talker and a pleasant companion.

In his early days, Bloch was one of the best informed men in the navy on armor-piercing projectiles, it is said. At one time he was chief of the bureau of ordinance in the Navy Department with the rank of rear admiral.

Bloch began his naval career 42 years ago. He was appointed to the Naval Academy in 1895 from Kentucky. He served in the Spanish-American war aboard the U. S. S. Iowa and was awarded the Specially Meritorious Medal for rescuing Spaniards from a burning vessel.

In 1899 he served aboard vessels in the Asiatic Station and five years later was appointed lieutenant. He received the rank of lieutenant commander in 1911.

Bloch was named a commander in 1916. In 1918 he saw duty in transporting and escorting troops and supplies to European ports through the war zone. He later was awarded the Navy Cross for this service.

He was advanced to captain in 1921 while attached to the Pacific Fleet. In 1923 Bloch was ordered to duty as naval inspector of ordnance at the Naval Proving Ground at Dahlgren, Virginia, and Naval Powder Factory at Indian Head, Md. The following year he received the post of chief of the ordnance bureau in Washington.

He later commanded the U. S. S. California. In 1929 he was ordered to the Naval War College at Newport for instruction.

He was commandant of the Washington Navy yard for several years, and in 1931 was named commander of the training squadron, scouting force.

He reported for duty as budget officer with the Navy Department in 1933 and later was the navy's judge-advocate general. He was commander of the battle force in the Pacific until named commander-in-chief.

Bloch was born in Woodbury, Ky. He is married and has one daughter, Ethel.

Refuses Injunction

COLUMBUS, March 10.—Common Pleas Judge John R. King refused yesterday to grant a temporary injunction, asked by 34 Ohio distributors of Indiana beer, to restrain the state tax commission and the state department of liquor control from levying a $1,500 fee on them.

The fee was levied March 1 in retaliation for a similar fee assessed Indiana dealers who import Ohio beer into Indiana.

Theater Attractions

Walter Huston, Ann Rutherford and James Stewart in a scene from "Of Human Hearts" at the State Friday and Saturday.

One of the screen's notable contributions to Americana comes to the screen in "Of Human Hearts," screen adaptation of Honore Morgan's classic story, "Benefits Forgot," in which Walter Huston, James Stewart and Beulah Bondi head a cast of notable character players. The picture will be the State attraction Friday and Saturday.

The Cast

Huston, fresh from his triumphs in "Dodsworth," plays Ethan Wilkins, circuit-riding preacher in the days of the pioneer mid-west. Miss Bondi, who portrayed the wife of Andrew Jackson in "The Gorgeous Hussy," plays the preacher's wife, and James Stewart the son whose ambition raises him to the position of a famous surgeon during the Civil war, and whose straying feet are finally set upon the right path by Abraham Lincoln.

Character players include Guy Kibbee, Charles Coburn, eminent New York stage actor making his first screen appearance, Gene Lockhart and Ann Rutherford. Leatrice Joy Gilbert, daughter of John Gilbert and Leatrice Joy, makes her debut in the picture.

The Story

The locale is a small backwoods town in Ohio before the Civil war. An itinerant preacher, with his wife and son, comes to take charge of the church and "ride circuit" preaching in other villages. He is deeply religious and sincere about his work with his flock. His wife adores him and follows him blindly.

The son, filled with ambition, resents their treatment and life. The father dies, after the son has left following a quarrel. The mother carries on alone. The Civil war starts. The boy wins fame as a surgeon, but forgets his mother who believes him dead. In a dramatic climax Abraham Lincoln solves the problem of the family.

Conclude Tonight

Will Rogers in "The County Chairman" and Miriam Hopkins and Ray Milland in "Wise Girl" will be seen at the State for the last time tonight.

The popular western player, Buck Jones, is starred in a new western at the Grand theater Friday and Saturday. The picture, "Sudden Bill Dorn" has Noel Francis, Evelyn Brent and Harold Hodge in prominent roles.

Rim Blow Is Fatal

Want to Know Why You're Constipated?

Would you give a million to shake off that dull, dopey, played-out feeling that often comes with common constipation? Then stop a minute and think.

What have you had to eat this week? Just meat, bread, eggs, potatoes? Probably the reason you're constipated is you don't get enough "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean how much you eat. It means a kind of food that isn't entirely digested, but leaves a soft, bulky mass in the intestines which helps a bowel movement.

What to do? Eat some Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast every day. This crunchy toasted cereal is not only rich in "bulk"—it also contains both the intestinal tonic vitamin B, and iron.

Eat All-Bran every day and drink plenty of water. See if you don't get off your heels and on your toes! Kellogg's All-Bran is sold by every grocer.

Plan Improvements In Transportation Method Of Schools

COLUMBUS, March 10.—The state department of education today planned to safeguard the lives of 286,000 children attending centralized schools by requiring improved transportation equipment.

Director of Education E. N. Dietrich said regulations drawn up by transportation Supt. C. E. Hutchins would be submitted to local school officials for consideration.

"While all proposed regulations may not be approved the department will insist upon increased safety for transportation equipment at the close of the present school year," Dietrich said.

Specifications include providing an emergency exit, steel body strong enough to support the weight of the bus if it is overturned, first aid kit, fire extinguishers and body and chassis construction designed to provide maximum safety for the occupants.

Safety glass must be used and the exhaust pipe must extend beyond the floor of the bus.

He proposed that the regulation affect all equipment "manufactured after June 1, 1938, and for all school buses regardless of age after Sept. 1, 1941."

First Aid in Coast Flood

With more than 20,000 reported homeless, and 150 reported dead in the floods which have ravaged Los Angeles, the city is beginning to repair the damage caused by the worst catastrophe in the state's history. An elderly man is shown getting first aid treatment. Relief agencies are working at top speed to care for refugees.

Senate Committee Played For Making Incomplete Record

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the bureau of public roads, said today an Ohio senate committee report criticizing the handling of federal aid road funds "contained no facts on which to base a conclusion."

The committee complained that highway money was being wasted without interference by federal officials.

"If the committee would point out our project in connection with its report," MacDonald said, "we would be glad to investigate it. The report did not contain a single fact that gave any foundation on which to form any conclusion."

He added the bureau was ready to cooperate in any proposal to determine disposition of road funds in Ohio or any other state. He said he had advised the committee the bureau's records were open for its inspection.

Numerous Parties Search For Plane

FRESNO, Calif., March 10.—Independent ground expeditions planned today to search for the airliner which vanished with nine persons in the mountains east of here during a storm March 1.

An unsuccessful aerial search and a growing belief that the Transcontinental and Western air liner might not be found until the high Sierra snowpack melts failed to discourage ground parties spurred by TWA's offer of $1,000 for finding the plane.

Paul E. Richter, vice president in charge of TWA operations, said at least one plane would be kept on the search indefinitely.

Die In Plane Crash

MANSFIELD, March 10.—Pilot Glenn Cage, 28, and Theodore Crum, 22, were killed yesterday when the plane in which they had flown over the city crashed on a hillside near the Cagle private landing field west of here.

A motorist who saw the plane just before the crash said it apparently was heading in for a landing.

contended the trial judge committed prejudicial error in giving the jury a special charge asked by the state. The appellate court ruled that although the special charge was defective, it was not sufficiently prejudicial to create reversible error.

Reverses Utilities

The supreme court, reversing the state utilities commission, held that the City of Norwalk had authority to pass an ordinance in January, 1937, that fixed rates for the Ohio Fuel Gas company. The commission had ruled the city lacked authority to pass the ordinance because the commission already had assumed jurisdiction in the rate dispute on a motion filed by the company for lowering of rates then being collected without authorization or ordinance.

The court ordered the commission to proceed with a determination as to the fairness of the ordinance rates which the court held superseded those collected by the company after expiration of a rate ordinance in January, 1936.

By the dismissing appeals, the court affirmed the lower courts of Stark county in holding the Canton Motor Coach, Inc. must pay Adam J. Miller $156 a share for his 203 shares of capital stock. He had refused assent to the sale of the company's assets and demanded $300 a share for his stock. The company offered him $40.91 a share on a declared book value of $43. A board of three appraisers appointed by the court fixed the value of shares at $150 and the court approved.

The court refused to review the appeal of Norris E. Cott from his conviction of robbery in Logan county. It also upheld the will of John H. Hogan of Lorain county which had been contested by two of his children. The will left the children $25 each and gave the remainder to his second wife, Clara E. Hogan.

Japanese Soldiers Succeeded In Halting R. R. Movements

SHANGHAI, March 10.—A Japanese spearhead force that fought its way across the Yellow river at Szechui 25 miles west of Chengchow succeeded today in interrupting transportation on the Lungtai railway.

Chinese sources admitted the Japanese had succeeded in cutting the railroad, east-west "life line" of central China and objective of a Japanese pincer movement since the fall of Nanking last December. Chinese declared, however, bitter fighting still was going on, with the troops of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek attempting to wipe out the Japanese advance unit.

Japanese succeeded in establishing a base on the south side of the Yellow river under an artillery screen and despite floods loosed cut dikes.

Severe clashes on the whole Yellow front were developing into a major engagement despite freezing weather. Shanghai had the heaviest snowfall in 40 years, and at least 30 refugees died in the streets of cold.

Meanwhile arrival of Japanese reinforcements reaching Shanghai were believed to presage resumption of a large-scale offensive in the Nanking area.

Establishment by the Japanese-sponsored Peiping provisional Chinese government of a new federal reserve bank was seen as initiating a battle between the Japanese yen and the Mexican silver dollar for supremacy in Chinese economy.

"Women In Love" by May Christie

CTAPHER XXVII

The offices of the International Insurance company were miles away from her department-store upon the Avenue but Ann intended sticking by the investigator so that the two of them might face the Claims Adjuster together . . . tell the same story that would lift the stigma from her sister.

There was no time left that day to return to the store.

Ann's interview in the Adjustment of Claims department of the insurance company took longer than expected . . . not that time mattered when it came to the clearing of her sister's reputation . . . devoted to her family as Ann was, she would have spent days and weeks, if necessary, in defence of the insanely reckless Claire.

Terrible as the incident had been, throwing a highlight on Claire's character and obvious lack of evil, a three-fold good would doubtless spring.

Claire's eyes had been abruptly opened to Carol Dittmar's falseness, to the knowledge that their friendship had been built upon the quick-sands of a mutual liking for gambling, and that—lacking Ann's championing—Carol would have seen Claire go under without exerting herself to avert the disaster.

Claire could never again regard Carol as a true friend.

Secondly, there was the exposure of Captain de Freyn. His trip with Carol to Atlantic City must, to Claire's eyes, put the final seal upon him of underhandedness, of complete lack of principle.

Thirdly—and most important, to Ann's mind—Claire's main awakening lay in her narrow escape from justice. By the barest margin, had she avoided a trip to the district attorney. It would give her food for reflecting . . . swerve her back into the right path. Getting something for nothing had been a hobby of hers for a long time, but now it had been borne in upon her forcibly that straight dealings paid, and crooked ones didn't. The old-fashioned saws were right. You reap as you sow. She'd been caught in the whirlwind.

But once the strain was over in the Claims Department, and Ann, her mission finished, had emerged into the clear, cold sunshine of the late March afternoon, her thoughts reverted happily to Paul Bradley, to his magic kisses in the taxicab that had swung them round the park in the moonlight of the wee, small hours of Sunday morning—less than two days ago, it was. And the most wonderful thing that had ever happened to her!

With sure, light steps she turned from Wall Street into Broad Street, the wide sweep of the Battery drawing her irresistibly.

Ships rode at anchor. Water-craft of all kinds skimmed over the waves. There was the tarry smell of shipping, the clean tang of a breeze blowing over salty water, giving one a sense of wanderlust, of adventuring to far countries. Ann cast care behind her, sniffing the ozone, her skirt whipping about her ankles as the wind ebbed about her. It was gloriously stimulating.

Over and over she repeated to herself Paul's words on that never-to-be-forgotten ride.

"I'm afraid I'm falling in love with you, Ann," he had whispered, kissing her—and then he'd kissed her again . . . and again.

She hadn't resisted. With every pulse hammering in a divine ecstasy, she had yielded to the glory and wonder of his arms, his kisses.

"It's amazing, but it's true! He means it!" her heart sang in her breast.

Words seemed superfluous between them. This physical urge for closeness, this breaking down of barriers between them, spoke volumes. Hadn't she dreamed of it for months past?

Finally, it was he who had drawn back. But not for an instant had he taken his eyes from her as she sat beside him in a sweet dream. Then it had all begun over again—his tenderness, his kisses. She could have swooned from the sheer rapture of it.

Impossible to connect him with the stern, business-like executive she had first known! The streak of hardness, of scepticism in him, fled from the difficult places in life, had vanished. He was delicate, tender, the ideal lover, finding her utterly desirable and lovely, his every caress telling her so.

He was her man.

How well he had hidden his feeling for her during the long winter months at the store! But spring was coming. Spring with Paul in Paris, enchanted city. Already, down by the Battery, there was the public square, as if a brush dipped in green paint had been gently brushed on the branches—more promise than reality—a vague, vernal budding.

Life was like that. The waiting. The hope. After long season, the sap stirring, rising. Then the budding. More waiting. The flowering.

Love was like that! thought Ann.

"Afraid you're falling in love?" she had whispered to Paul in the taxi. "Am I so terrible?"

What he had said had sent the blood in delicious waves to her ten fingers, her ten toes.

"Then you aren't afraid! You're happy!"

"Are you happy, Ann?"

No need for words. She had turned her pretty face to him, as a sunflower towards the sun, and he had kissed her as though nothing in the world could ever separate them.

Came the eternal woman's question: "Why do you love me, Paul?"

"I want to hear."

"For something more than the allure of you—something above and beyond physical attraction, important and necessary as that is," had come his earnest answer.

"Do you know so very much about me?" she had ventured happily in the haven of his arms.

His dark eyes were very tender as he told her that he loved her for her courage in shouldering family burdens—Rosalind had told him all about it during the course of the evening, and before that, her grandfather, old Tom Bradley, had enlightened him.

For her standards of conduct, too, he loved her, that innate delicacy and refinement that was Ann. For her loyalty to her job, for the capacity she had of never tattling, of soft-pedaling or overlooking the defects of her fellow-workers, even when they were catty to her, and sought to harm her, through jealousy. She was above such pettiness.

From his own observation he had seen it, and (though he did not tell her), he'd had a long talk with Renita Parrish, who had corroborated it, and Renita had assured him that it was Ann who had weaned her away from drinking.

For her dignity, too, he loved her. For her sweetness of nature that had been severely tested. For the sheer femininity of the young girl that was Ann.

"Brains and beauty are a wonderful combination," he had told her in the taxi, "but there are still better things, and you have got them, dear."

"Are you happy, Ann?"

There was a strain of the old-fashioned in Paul Bradley. Ann had seen it. He would want to meet her parents, visit her home, do things conventionally. He was no Freddie Brandon, no Captain de Freyn.

He would want to claim her proudly, before everybody. It would all be above-board, and clear sailing. She trusted him.

But they could not ride forever in Central Park. Dawn started to streak the sky over towards the East River.

On the doorstep of the brownstone house which was her home, he gave her a quick handclasp. The taxi waited.

"You've been so sweet to me tonight, my dear. I shall never forget it."

Somehow the words had struck her with a faint, foreboding chill.

"You don't know how I've appreciated everything. It has been a happy evening?" he asked her.

What an inadequate word to describe an emotion—a whole gamut of emotions—that were like sunlit waves of the ocean, waiting for the Isles of the Blessed!

Why, she had never lived until this glorious evening! She'd been like a poor little chrysalis imprisoned—not realizing the wonder and the glory waiting for her—with Paul Bradley.

"And one of these evenings, we'll have to do it again."

It confused her, dashed her. She longed to hear him say: "Tomorrow I'll telephone you. Maybe we could go to church together"—or—"Maybe we could take a long walk in the Park." The almond-blossoms were just breaking into bloom up by the bridge-path where Ann had used to ride on horseback, Sunday mornings. Would it be unconsciously bold to ask him? Dare she?

But she was sensitive.

"We'll have to do it again one evening," he repeated, and looked up at the windows of the house as though to remind her of the lateness of their return.

She was ashamed of the longing that caught her to be in his arms, just for a farewell moment, feel his warm kiss on her mouth, hear him ask her for a definite appointment.

None of these things happened. With a second handclasp—quick, conventional—he bade her good-night, walked down the steps to the waiting taxicab.

Ann was the first of her staff to arrive in her department on Wednesday morning. She was to have a window display.

That meant Ramesses, the clever dresser, putting his best foot foremost, and Ann wanted to be in on it, seeing that everything was perfect, before the great shade on the window was rolled up.

She revelled in the Lingerie department with its garments like exotic flowers.

But a tiny frown puckered her brow as her gaze lit on the consignment of underwear that was not selling. Would it have to be marked down?

Like a housewife, she had her buying allowance from the merchandise-manager, Paul Bradley. If she could not dispose of the goods, it would be her first humiliation since promotion. Yet the manufacturer had assured her of the excellent value of the goods, and her own knowledge of silks had corroborated it. Besides, whatever his failings, Tim O'Hallahan was honest in his business dealings.

What about peeping up her sales-girls by offering them a small commission on this merchandise, since she did not care to make a "mark-down"?

Putting it out of her mind for a moment, she went into the Negligee Salon.

Someone was there. A man among the bougainvillee robes, the charming lounging pajamas and frail undies—looking huge and rather helpless in this hot-house of femininity, with its gilded chairs and sofas, its pink velvet carpet, its window draped with blue and rose and golden tassels, in the Du Barry style.

Ann blinked, halted.

It was Paul Bradley, the merchandise-manager, rising from a rose velvet couch, coming towards her.

Waves of lovely color swept into her face.

He had come here for a quick, stolen meeting? The faint aroma of the dainty garments all about them gave an added touch of femininity. Quiet secluded perfume, wasn't it an ideal setting for a kiss . . . ?

"Good morning. This is an early meeting," smiled Ann.

But there was no smile on the lips of the merchandise-manager. His mouth looked tense as, for a moment, he stared at her silently. Was he regretting the taxi ride in the early hours of Sunday morning? Already, in sane and sober mood, was he regarding it, as an indiscretion?

What did she really know about him? Perhaps after a party it was his habit to make love to pretty girls? They'd all drunk plenty of champagne at Il Roccoco. Perhaps he only regarded the aftermath as an incident? Had she cheapened herself? She couldn't bear it if he thought so.
